

BOWIE KNIFE, by Raymond W. Thorp, $3, The University of New Mexico Press, Albuquerque, N.M.

This is the biography of a knife. It begins with a duel in the Arkansas House of Representatives and ends on the tragedy of the Alamo.

The No. 1 character in the book is the world's most famous knife—whose half-formed idea was brought by James Bowie to Washington, Hempstead county, Arkansas, more than a hundred years ago, and here was perfected and translated into steel by James Black, greatest blacksmith and armorer of the Old West.

The story belongs to our own section—in fact, our own country. I don't need to tell you it is a fascinating book, and that every family in southwest Arkansas ought to have a copy. For any story about weapons must necessarily deal also with the men who wielded them. Therefore Mr. Thorp tells not only the history of the Bowie Knife but the personal histories of the brothers Bowie—John and Rezin and James—and the hundreds of friends and foes who went down the old Southwest Trail through Washington and Fulton, this country, to Mexico when the world was young and Texas was a-borning.

The story of James Black and his Washington smithy has always been known here, only 10 miles away, until your correspondent got out the Arkansas Centennial Edition June 26, 1936, one of the unpublished manuscripts we printed.

For the first time was that of the late Steve Carrigan giving the history and photographs of one of Black's Bowie knives which had come down through Mr. Carrigan's family. This one article carried the impulse for a fine book.

But it fell to the lot of Raymond W. Thorp, firearms and knife expert, now of Los Angeles, to do the 20 years research work necessary to produce the complete and authentic story which makes "Bowie Knife" a standard authority on this section of American history. Mr. Thorp, born at Miami, Mo., worked as a boat hand on the Mississippi and Missouri rivers, served in World War I as a Navy small arms instructor, and about 1926 began his first work gathering material for "Bowie Knife." You know all this while reading it, for he has assembled the greatest mass of pioneer newspaper clippings I have ever seen—and one by one he knocks down errors and journalistic exaggerations to get at the final truth about Bowie and the blacksmith Black.

Black perfected the greatest cutting blade since the days of the Arabian swords. He is believed to have re-discovered the Damascus secret of tempering steel—but before his death he lost it again.

And in that story lies a tragedy whose power you won't realize until you have read the book.

French Miners Challenge for Showdown

Paris, Oct. 19.—(UP)—Communist-controlled French miners challenged the government to a showdown in the Northern and Central coal fields today by ordering maintenance and security crews out of the pits.

Orders for the crews to remain away from their jobs threatening the mines with inundation, were issued by the French Confederation of Labor after thousands of troops in battle dress had seized the mines in Central France.

Scattered violence between strikers and security guards was reported.

At St. Etienne, in the middle of the Central France coal area, some 1,000 strikers tried to recover the Villiers pit from troops who seized it late yesterday. Guards hurled tear gas bombs to force the strikers to withdraw and reports said "a number of persons on each side were injured."

The miners, reinforced by metal workers, were armed with stones, clubs and other weapons. They forced the guards to retreat until the tear gas was used.

Tear gas was also used to disperse some 80 strikers who buried stones at a trainload of non-strikers entering the pits at Merlebach late yesterday. No injuries were reported.

A union communiqué called on the miners "to defend their strike with energy and not tocede to him a few small favors."

He was the first man I had met in the United States to inspire me with confidence. He suggested that Vladimir Zenzinov a free-lance Russian journalist would be in a position to give time to my rescue.

Although he had a reputation as revolutionist in Czarist days Mr. Weinbaum assured me that I would be in safe hands. After telephoning Mr. Zenzinov, he sent me to his home on Riverside Drive.

I knew I was walking a tightrope by establishing contacts with anti-Communist elements. Mr. Zenzinov showed himself as sympathetic to my plight as his friend the editor. The circumstances under which Mr. Zenzinov lived in one room did not bespeak affluence. I pointed out that he had no money and he told me that he was sure arrangements could be made to put me in a safe place. He described to me the work of the Tolstoy Foundation to aid refugees from Soviet oppression and the farm which was operated by Countess Alexandra Tolstoy, the favorite daughter of the great Russian writer. It seemed an ideal hide-out and haven.

Laneley bitterly attacked President Truman and J. Howard McGrath, chairman of the National Democratic committee.

Charging the Democratic leaders with being afraid to submit the proposed civil rights program to a vote of the people, he said voters who have not taken time to analyze the subject are "following the discredited proposals of careless, unethical politicians."

Such a program, he said, means political debauchery, retrogression and degeneracy.

It is the abandonment of the Democratic party by those who support it. It is compromise to suit the occasion. It is the assassination of Democracy itself, the lynching of the constitution, the crucifixion of States Rights, the betrayal and death of personal liberty and freedom."

I was arranged that I continue living with the Ponomakovs until Saturday morning when I would leave for the pier of the Pobeda. But instead of going to the boat, I would go to Zenninov's place and he would accompany me to the Reed Farm of the Tolstoy Foundation some 20 miles out of New York.

Friday evening, the night before my scheduled sailing, Ponomakov came home from the consulate.

In today's article Mrs. Katsenkin tells of her success in finding someone to help her remain in America, of how a friendly editor and a journalist led her to Countess Tolstoy, of their plan for her escape, of the mystery of the hypodermic needle marks on her arm and the flight to freedom.

Only two days remained until the scheduled sailing of the Pobeda which was to take me back to Russia. I was like a person being swept by a tide out into the open sea. Although I was at the very shore, I could find no anchorage.

The evening of Wednesday, July 28th, I telephoned the Russian language newspaper, the Novoye Russkoye Slovo, and asked for the editor. Perhaps I was influenced in this by the act of Igor Gouzenko my companion in Canada when he went to the Ottawa newspaper in an attempt to expose what I learned.

New York—(AP)—What does a travel agent do on vacation? Why, they spend more. Their level of living is about the same as it is in Puri."

And so after 26 years of telling other people where to go and what to see, Norman L. Chimayog came to Norman L. Chimayog to see for himself what was here.

Chimayog is really a product of the mysterious east. He is Chinese who was born in Australia, speaks Spanish, carries a British passport and earns his living as a travel agent for the Peninsular International Airways in Lima. This accounts for every continent except Africa of which he is maddened.

Concluding a six-week coast-to-coast visit—not a cook's tour—Chimayog put his general impression of the United States in two polite words:

"It's good."

With oriental caution he qualified this endorsement by adding:

"The people are too commercialized."

But he thought the North American market must also be very honest, as he saw few policemen around.

"In Peru there are many police men—very many," he said gravely.

For Chet Fred Dowdy of Texas City said the explosion was caused by the ignition of an accumulation of manufactured gas which had leaked from a pipeline alongside Highway 146, near the Stone Oil Refinery.

Witnesses said the gas, which hung in the roadside ditches in a visible fog, went up in a huge puff of flame. The searing blast burned 16 automobiles waiting for a string of cars to pass the rail road crossing.

The explosion occurred about 7:20 a.m. and started rumors that Texas City was undergoing a repetition of the disastrous explosions and fires of April 16-17, which killed 51 persons and devastated the city.

So if voters were puzzled about what the third party stood for, they could easily figure it out.

Another Blast in Texas City Fatal to 4

Texas City, Oct. 19.—(AP)—Four persons were burned fatally when 40 others injured in a gas explosion and fire which swept a line of automobiles at a blocked railroad crossing here last night.

Three of the dead occurred this morning.

The dead are:

Clarence Stewart, 24, Negro taxi cab driver from Galveston.

Cornelio Olvera, 20, Negro woman, Galveston.

Sylvester Villareal, Galveston.

Jack Flynn, Joplin, Mo.

The injured, who were taken to hospitals here and at Galveston across Galveston Bay, included many whose burns were described as critical.

The United States is in its most vulnerable position now, Fulbright said, because of the moral effect it would have upon the German people and upon other peoples of the world looking to them for leadership.

The senator said that the airift was costing the U. S. more than $100,000,000 a year, yet it was "worth it." He said the Russians were amazed that the Western powers could supply the huge city by air.

Fulbright said Russia will continue to infiltrate Western countries with its communistic ideas.

He said, "An effort to bring about internal collapse rather than to destroy our hostiles."

The United States is in its most vulnerable position now, Fulbright said, because of the moral effect it would have upon the German people and upon other peoples of the world looking to them for leadership.

The senator said that the airift was costing the U. S. more than $100,000,000 a year, yet it was "worth it." He said the Russians were amazed that the Western powers could supply the huge city by air.

Fulbright quoted Gen. Lucien Clay, commander of the U. S. forces in Europe, as believing Russia will not provoke a war, and that abandonment of Berlin to the Soviets would be disastrous to the Western powers.

One thing seems evident, however. Mr. Wallace has made his move too late. This latest about-face does not square with the general tone of a campaign which one political writer has aptly wrapped up in the slogan, "My Country, Always Wrong."

It is interesting to note that Mr. Baldwin, in announcing the switch, admitted that third-party endorsement of a candidate could amount to a kiss of death. In explaining why third party candidates had been withdrawn from several races, he spoke of "pressure and threats of withdrawal of financial support exerted on many Democrats if they accepted our endorsement."

In choosing the candidates that it would support, the third party used the CIO yardstick for determining the liberality of congressional incumbents from their voting record. This is the same CIO that Mr. Wallace has accused of many grievous errors, including working for the interests of those monsters of reaction, the steel industry.

And in choosing the party of its newly chosen candidates, the Wallaceites picked one which, according to their stand-and-pander, is the distinguishable from the Republicans in such matters as emergencies for war, control by Wall Street, and the taking of candy away from children.

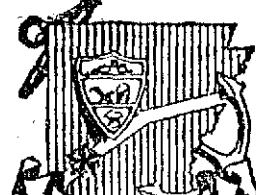

So if voters were puzzled about what the third party stood for, they could easily figure it out.

FCC to Decide Fate of Radio Gift Programs

Washington, Oct. 19—(AP)—The Federal Communications Commission sat today to hear final arguments on this momentous question of the air waves: Do the radio give-away programs involve gambling or just good, clean fun?

The commission has already indicated it regards at least some of them as lotteries, or games of chance, which may not be advertised on the air. So it has proposed a set of new regulations designed to bar these particular programs from further broadcasting.

A majority of the radio industry, as represented by the National Association of Broadcasters, the major networks and a long list of advertising agencies prepared arguments against the moves at today's hearing.

Their prime contentions are that FCC is without authority to "censor" broadcasting programs and that if any lotteries are involved, it is up to the Justice Department—not the commission—to act.

Louis G. Cowan, Inc., New York producers of "Stop the Music," the Sunday night melody-guessing feature whose jack-pot frequently runs up to $30,000 in merchandise, submitted a court test.

"The lottery statutes," said Cowan in a pre-argument brief, "are aimed at protecting people from being cheated. In the give-away, there is no chance for a listener to suffer financially or to lose any pecuniary advantage."

"Stop the Music" vigorously contested the suggestion that the public's audience is attracted by hope of winning a prize through a telephone call. It said the average listener tunes in on contest programs for the entertainment value.

The brief said Ralph Edwards' "Miss Hush" and "Walking Man" programs of the past year at times had a Hooper radio survey rating of 30—indicating a possible 30,000,000 listeners on a given night. Cowan said that when this total was put up against the number of contestants' letters it showed that 99 per cent of the listeners were listening for fun, not for a reward.

Legion Goes on Parade Today

Miami, Fla., Oct. 19—(UPI)—The American Legion goes on parade today.

The entire day was set aside for preparing and staging the gigantic eight-hour extravaganza, starting at 3 p.m. (CST). It will highlight the 30th annual national convention which opened yesterday and continues through Thursday.

Officals estimate 300,000 persons will see the parade during its four-mile march through downtown Miami and along palm-lined Biscayne Boulevard.

Top Legion officials, high army and navy brass and a long list of distinguished visitors will participate.

President Truman, who addressed the Legion yesterday and urged a firm peace stand, flew on to Raleigh, N.C.

Gov. Earl Warren of California left Sacramento late yesterday on a scheduled non-stop flight to Miami. The Republican vice presidential nominee will address the convention tomorrow.

Harold Stassen, former governor of Minnesota and a GOP spokesman, also arrives today and is scheduled to speak tomorrow.

Several other governors, cabinet members and high government officials from Washington were on hand.

J. Strom Thurmond, presidential candidate of the States Rights Democrats, gave a brief, unscheduled speech yesterday. He was introduced as the governor of South Carolina and a member of that state's delegation, but his presidential aspirations were not mentioned.

where he served as secretary, unusually early. I was jittery and suspicious. He looked over the bundles and the suitcases in my room, and asked me how many heavy pieces I had sent off to the express company. I was wondering if my surreptitious visits to the anti-Soviet Russians had been spotted.

I retired late that night. As was my habit, I went into the kitchen to get something out of our common refrigerator for a snack. Usually I had tea, sometimes a glass of milk.

I was known as a light sleeper. The slightest noise would awaken me. I had the reputation of never being late at school. That night, I slept like a drugged person. Not once did I wake up. And when I rose in the morning, my head was as heavy as lead. I ascribed my condition to my nervous tension.

When I emerged from my room, Poronnikov was already up and about, and unusual procedure for him. He stared at me intently and then called my attention to a couple of red marks on my right arm. I looked at them in astonishment, not having been aware of them before.

"Oh, it's just nerves, must be a rash," I remarked, dismissing the matter. At the time nothing else could have entered my mind. It was only a few days later, when I was already recovering from my injuries in the Roosevelt Hospital that my experience that night assumed a subtle significance. The note of Moltke to the United States ambassador was read to me, in which the Soviet Foreign Minister had put special emphasis on the cause of the spots on my arm as they were exhibited to the press while I was held in the Soviet consulate. I then recalled my condition during the night of July 30.

Dewey Studies Split-Ballot Possibilities

Albany, N.Y., Oct. 19—(AP)—The possibility that ballot splitting may reach an all-time high in the Nov. 2 election was studied today by the followers of Gov. Thomas E. Dewey.

The Republican presidential nominee worked here today on his next major campaign speech, to be delivered tomorrow night in New York City before the Herald-Tribune forum. He is expected to discuss plans for development of the nation's resources.

Dewey will make a nonpolitical speech at an Al Smith Memorial dinner in New York Thursday night. Plans for the weekend are not definite.

With his second campaign trip behind him, Dewey and his strategists were said to be convinced that there is going to be a lot of ticket splitting this year—in fact, possibly more than ever before.

This apparently is due to interest that has developed in Senate and House races and, in some instances, in close contests for governorships.

The Dewey camp's feeling is that its candidate will win by what might amount almost to a landslide in electoral votes.

But even with a top-heavy result in electoral votes, most of Dewey strategists don't think their candidate will have a landslide in the popular vote.

Because of this they are frankly afraid that Dewey's margin in some states will not be large enough to pull through some Republican senators who are under fire.

Dewey returned to Albany last night from a 4,500-mile, eight-day tour of 10 states.

In Syracuse yesterday the third stop on the tour occurred. A youngster there hurled a tomato which squashed against the top of a railroad car a few feet from where Dewey was speaking.

Dewey asked: "What was that? We've got enough flowers up here already." Flowers had just been presented to Mrs. Dewey.

Answering Dewey, the boy who threw it yelled:

"That was a tomato!"

Dewey, paying no further attention, went on with his speech.

In Syracuse as in each of the other New York communities he cited his record as governor as a blueprint for the kind of government he wants to bring to Washington.

2 Badly Hurt in Fight With Chimps

Screen actress Cristine Cooper doesn't like her figure. It interferes with her career. She's lost eight pounds because producers look at her face, cast her for "sweet-young-thing" roles—and change their minds when they look at the rest of her. Curvaceous Cooper says she knows she could be a fine actress and wishes movie moguls would stop wolf-whistling long enough to listen to her.

Fire Foil

Evansville, Ind., Oct. 19—(UPI)—Two unarmed men battled a pair of escaped chimpanzees through cages and on the rooftops of the Wexler Park zoo here yesterday. Both of the men suffered serious injuries before sheriff's deputies, city policemen and zoo officials joined the wild scramble and killed one of the animals and recaptured the other.

The animals attacked George Davis, 53-year-old plumbing company worker, and E. J. Morton, 45, Evansville Park board general foreman, as they were checking the heating system in an adjoining cage.

"Hank," a heavy male chimpanzee, and his mate, "Kuku," cracked the lock on the door connecting the two cages. They pounced on the two workers without warning.

Davis broke loose and climbed a ladder to the roof of the animal house but one chimp swung up after him and grabbed bare-handed.

Tussle followed. They fell from the roof, the chimpanzee landing on Davis. The struggle continued on the ground until help arrived and the animal was driven off. Davis lost two fingers on his left hand and suffered a broken wrist during the fight and fall.

The other battling ape kept Morton trapped in the cage. Morton suffered multiple lacerations on his hands, arms, legs and a dislocated shoulder before the chimpanzee turned and fled. Morton lost consciousness before he was taken to a hospital.

Bob McGraw, the zoo's animal superintendent, trapped the male chimpanzee in an empty alligator pit and killed it with a deputy's revolver. He later captured Kuku on the edge of a highway near the zoo and led her back to her cage.

fore, outside of a blanket apology for everything done by the Kremlin, they must be doubly puzzled now. They are confronted by the spectacle of Mr. Wallace still going around the country roundly condemning the party of a couple dozen candidates and his own party is trying to get elected.

About the only clear thing that emerges from this thickening political fog is the picture of the presidential candidate himself who is looking less like a mystic religious and misguided messiah, and more like a politician who doesn't care much what else happens so long as he can help defeat the man who embarrassed him by giving him a well-deserved boot out of the Cabinet and indirectly prevented him from sitting in the White House.

Former Boss Gets Cooper Out of Jam

St. Louis, Oct. 19. —(UP)—Mort Cooper, former pitching star for the St. Louis Cardinals who has been charged with passing bad checks here and in Ohio, was free today on $2,000 bonds posted by his former employer.

Sam Breadon, former Cardinals president, signed two $800 bonds for the charges here yesterday and posted a $1,000 bond on the Ohio charges at police headquarters.

Cooper pleaded innocent when arraigned before criminal court Judge Louis Comerford.

Cooper said he expected to get enough money to cover the checks from the signing of a baseball contract, but the deal fell through.

He did not identify the club with which he was negotiating, but said his pitching arm is back in shape and he hopes to play baseball again.

Cooper's attorneys said they planned to go to Cincinnati later this week in connection with the charges there. They indicated that they expected the case to be cleared up quickly and restitution made.

I can't imagine what responsibilities they'll find for that many editors in such an other-handed, non-controversial manner, but that is their business. Likewise, they can say, too, that the other-handiness of the Ladies Home Journal seems times more apparent than real. You know you are reading at hancap, unopinionated. Fung, sit out the kind of life entertainment of the kind who sit all alone and then you feel a little smart and that is the political credit giving you the load. Otherwise what for Eleanor the great all these years? She isn't nonpolitical, is she? Otherwise, how come the seven pro-Wallace editors? How many executives in your office are for Henry Wallace?

And what are the policies of those great journalists, Bruce and Beatrice Blackmar Gould, the big names? I'm sorry to speculate, but that they may have invited speculation and remember their long intimacy with the great Gable. I would guess that they were two of the few who voted to vote for Wallace. Yet, I would guess that the editors of the Ladies Home Journal, which takes in billions of dollars every year, from the American big business, are two of the seven who favor the drowning slob who didn't dare say whether he did or did not write the libelous letters to the oriental Mahatma whose disciples thought they could cure a broken leg by chafing it on one of his noseholes.

Of course, I noticed that in making the coquettish announcement the day and night Bruce and Beatrice wrote that Mr. Gould had "dashed" Bobblehead Wallace and Glen Taylor, his running mate, and the "guru-like" Roosevelt. Frightfully clever, eh? Gould.

That seems to "vote for" at least one of the Roosevelt.

That sort of thing. But I don't think it and I were thinking the same because while the report about the "coquettish" two-day election was not true, I say it is. I say it is, too, that the political power within certain cities, but not within all, is still with Wallace. The Ladies Home Journal gave FDR a good job. It signed a general petition of him and Taylor two editorials, too, and got the "solid" majority of the voters of its own editor, too. The Kansan, example, no position for the Rooseveltites.

I guess at that editorial poll of the magazine issue is quite true. Wallace then said, I think, that he will run in a sincere campaign, could abide on its editorial policies, even if supporters of a candidate in another party.

I guess the last, though, is that we never heard of any editor who would support a candidate in another party.

Strong Panthers Seeking to Mar Hope Record

New York, Oct. 17.—The Ladies Home Journal announced in its October issue, and rather too bloody roguishly, I thought, that in its secret poll of its editorial staff, seven of the 50 editors had voted for Henry Wallace, the candidate of the Communists and the Kremlins, for president of the United States. The wag who wrote this little confession did his best, I thought, to dash the hopes of the Communists and the Kremlinites, demanded to pass it off as a mere quip, but I struck me as a piece of calculated insolence to the stuffy, high-sounding rooms of big business, as Jim Di-Yu Luce has been calling the sanctum of the biggest advertising agencies these last 25 years. After all, this tycoon put up the money for the beautiful color effects in the L. H. J. every month and for the salaries of those seven Communists who are going to vote the Moscow ticket.

This magazine is one of the Curtis Publishing Company jets and it has been a loudspeaker for the great gatsby since just after the first coronation of H. L. M. Moore, now the first, R. L. on March 4, 1933. She also runs variable measure of daily prattle six times a week in a list of newspapers, but her journalistic talents rose and fell with the election returns and so, more and more often these days, you find it wrapped around the goiters and electric belts, as we used to say, or just don't find it at all.

I have been a professional boy and man, since 1910 and I have never seen worse copy in print, than that for which the old girl grabbed her rate-off all those years, and the authors of such novelty goods included Jess Willard, Battling Nelson and Eddie Cantor.

Willard had days when he was comparatively pretty good, but the Ladies Home Journal has continued to run this stuff as a leading feature, which is known except that now and again the editor is fair to the customers, ought to print a list of her Communist-front and party-line connections and activities and give us a tell about some office intimacies. What has been the total amount paid this great journalist since she enjoyed her attack of literary talent right after the election of 1932? Who selects the convenient questions that she answers, or sometimes pretends to answer but cleverly doesn't answer? Such as the one about the dead for a plot at Warm Springs that Moosjaw signed, forever excluding his dear friends, the Negro race, from ownership or even occupancy. She stalled and stalled around on that one and may have seemed to answer it but never did. She couldn't.

This announcement about the poll of the "editors" of the Ladies Home Journal said that 29 voted for Dewey, but that Truman and Wallace were tied at seven votes each. Nine hadn't yet decided, which meant that some or all of them might vote for bubblehead, one wasn't voting and six were away.

About one-sixth of the editors of this magazine, which lives on the advertising and circulation revenues of the capitalist industry and society of the United States, were frankly committed to vote for the candidate of those who can't fit the fifth column.

I can't imagine what responsibilities they'll find for that many editors in such an other-handed, non-controversial manner, but that is their business. Likewise, they can say, too, that the other-handiness of the Ladies Home Journal seems times more apparent than real. You know you are reading at hancap, unopinionated.
